OPIS:

Od svrgavanja autokratskog režima Slobodana Miloševića 2000. godine, Srbija je donela nekoliko važnih zakona i ustavnih promena i osnovala savete nacionalnih manjina kako bi zaštitila prava svojih manjina koje su trpele represiju devedesetih godina prošlog veka. Saveti nacionalnih zajednica u Srbiji imaju potencijalno velika ovlašćenja u obezbeđivanju jezičke, obrazovne i kulturne (iako ne i teritorijalne) autonomije, pa su u novijim naučnim radovima prepoznati kao zaštitni mehanizam za zaštitu manjinskih prava, koji bi „potencijalno mogao da ponudi obrazac za rešavanje etničkih tenzija u drugim centralnoevropskim i istočnoevropskim zemljama“ (Smith & Semenishin, 2016), a dovele su i do trajnog pozitivnog trenda u srpsko-mađarskim odnosima i pravima manjina. Međutim, dok su istorija, aktivnosti i efekti Mađarskog nacionalnog saveta relativno dobro proučeni, nacionalni saveti drugih etničkih grupa u Srbiji, poput Albanaca, privukli su manje pažnje.

Cilj ovog vebinara je da podstakne diskusiju i uporedi efekte ova dva nacionalna saveta u zaštiti njihovih manjinskih prava u Srbiji. Vebinar okuplja nekoliko naučnika/ca i eksperata za pitanje nacionalnih saveta u Srbiji, predstavnike mađarske i albanske nacionalne manjine, zvaničnike njihovih nacionalnih saveta, kao i predstavnike zvaničnih institucija Srbije. Oni će izneti svoje stavove o rezultatima i dostignućima Nacionalnog saveta u praksi i njihovoj efikasnosti u promovisanju učešća manjina u političkom životu, kako na lokalnom tako i na nacionalnom nivou. Prema njihovim Statutima, proklamovani ciljevi i vrednosti ovih Saveta, kao i njihovo delovanje, usmereni su na solidarnost i imaju demokratski i inkluzivni karakter posvećen kolektivnim problemima od javnog interesa. Oni imaju za cilj da ostvare društveni uticaj kroz dugoročne aktivnosti koordinisane sa drugim političkim akterima. Stoga ovaj vebinar ima za cilj da ispita mogućnosti nacionalnih saveta mađarske i albanske nacionalne manjine u Srbiji da budu efikasni kanali za veće učešće manjina u političkom životu u oblastima u kojima ovi saveti imaju dominantnu ulogu — sektorima koji se odnose na kulturni identitet, obrazovanje, jezik i očuvanje kulturne istorije.

DESCRIPTION:

Since the 2000 overthrow of Slobodan Milošević's autocratic regime, Serbia made several important laws and constitutional changes and established national minority councils to safeguard the rights of its minorities that were oppressed throughout the 1990s. Having potentially high powers in securing language, educational and cultural (although not territorial) autonomy, Serbian NCs have been readily recognized in recent scholarship as a safeguard for protecting minority rights, that 'could potentially offer a template for addressing ethnic tensions in other Central and East European countries' (Smith & Semenyshyn, 2016) and resulted in a lasting positive trend in Serbian-Hungarian relations and minority rights. However, while the history, activities and effects of the Hungarian national council has been relatively well studied, NCs of other ethnic groups in Serbia, such as Albanians, attracted less attention.

The goal of this webinar is to discuss and compare the effects of these two national councils in protecting their minority rights in Serbia. The webinar gathers several scholars and experts on the issue of the national councils in Serbia, and Hungarian and Albanian NC and Serbian officials institutions' representatives. They will share their views about the results and achievements of the National Council in practice and their effectiveness in promoting minorities' participation in political life, both at the local and national levels. According to their Statute, Councils' proclaimed goals and values, as well as their actions, are focused on solidarity, and have democratic and inclusive character oriented towards collective problems of public interest. They have a goal to make a social impact through long-term activities coordinated with other political actors. Therefore this webinar aims to examine the possibilities of the National Councils of the Hungarian and Albanian National Minority in Serbia to be efficient channels for greater participation of minorities in political life in areas where these Councils have predominant role — sectors relating to cultural identity, education, language and the preservation of cultural history.
